the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2010 (Office of National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (2000) has identified the need to develop a 'new paradigm' for the care of the elderly, one that is based on the concept of 'active ageing'. This paradigm is based on the idea that older people should be able to live independently, to be active and to participate in society. The Department of Health (2000) has identified a number of key areas for action, including: (1) the need to improve the health and well-being of older people; (2) the need to improve the social and economic conditions of older people; and (3) the need to improve the services available to older people.
